And one of the most sensational cases was the killer known as the "Zodiac Killer." Although there were several murders, which then lasted a series of years, the "Zodiac" was only ever linked to three, though he left his mark on the city in a way that even he could not predict. While the "Zodiac" didn't kill a lot of people, he did make it the focus of public interest. Besides killing people, he left taunting letters to the police and also sent to the media as well. He even made a bunch of predictions which came true as he operated in the area. A bill that was signed in the California authorized $2,000 for anyone who could provide information that would lead to the capture of the killer. And this was a lot of money from the middle 1970s to the 1970s. But after a lot of work, the police were able to track down a suspected resident of San Francisco, who was suspected of being the "Zodiac Killer." The case came before the trial, and at that point, the suspect didn't have any knowledge of the crimes. He did have knowledge of the letters and also had been stalking people. And the jury had a hard time convicting the suspect, because they couldn't prove that he had committed the crime. But the alleged crimes took place in different parts of the state of California, leaving many detectives to believe that there were others involved. They even stayed on the case after the suspect had been cleared. Even though he had no knowledge of the crimes, he left taunting letters around the state. And there were plenty of suspects.
